Shifting Ground: new political dividing lines?
The interaction between leave/remain and Conservative/Labour supporters
Introduction

• This study tries to understand the relationship between how people voted in the EU Referendum and their support for the two main political parties.
• We look at the post EU Referendum wave of our long-term longitudinal study supported by Unbound Philanthropy (this wave was conducted Oct 2016), which explores a very wide range of issues facing Britain and social attitudes among a large sample
• We have divided the data into four groups: i) Conservative Leavers, ii) Conservative Remainers, iii) Labour Leavers and iv) Remainers
Overview: continuity and change...

Three distinct groups of issues...

1. Leavers and Remainers united: on nostalgia for past, anxiety about change, immigration, pressures on public services and jobs, scepticism of experts, faith in ordinary people and distrust in globalisation

2. Conservative and Labour divided: Labour more “left behind”, affected by austerity, struggling financially, think life getting worse, believe economy rigged, want more income equality, while both Conservative Leave/Remain groups emphasise different rewards to reflect effort, most proud of our history and democracy

3. Interaction issues: gradient that runs from Conservative Leavers to Labour Remainers on support for collective provision of welfare, opposition to political correctness, support for gay marriage, opposition to death penalty
Referendum vote by party

% Conservatives and Labour who voted in the referendum

Leave | Remain | Leave | Remain
--- | --- | --- | ---
73% | 40% | 27% | 60%

Labour Remain: 28%
Labour Leave: 10%
Conservative Remain: 25%
Conservative Leave: 37%
1. On some attitudes leavers and remainers are united across the political divide
Leavers are more nostalgic for the past, feel a sense of alienation and an anxiety that things are changing too fast.
Leavers more likely to agree things were better in the past...

To what extent do you agree or disagree... Things in Britain were better in the past

2. But on some issues and attitudes, party lines are still strongly defined
Labour supporters feel more ‘left behind’ than Conservative supporters – they are more affected by austerity, struggling financially, feel they can’t get ahead in life and that the economy is rigged towards the rich

Conservative leavers most likely to oppose political correctness – BUT there is similarity among Conservative remainers and Labour leavers

How much does the following describe the REAL you...I am opposed to political correctness

- Not at all like me
- Not like me
- A little like me
- Quite like me
- Like me
- Very much like me
- Don’t know
