Key Terminology

Social Reputation Score (SRS) is a business-facing metric that measures overall sentiment around your brand on the social web. On a scale of 0-100, a high SRS indicates a large share of positive mentions around your brand/topic, while a low SRS indicates a large share of negative mentions. The Social Reputation Score allows organizations to understand how they compare to their competitors within their markets, and against other markets, by analyzing customer satisfaction in real-time.

Brands use SRS as a business metric for Customer Satisfaction, as well as for industry benchmarking, competitive analysis, campaign measurement, and crisis monitoring.

The volume rating formula factors volume and sentiment of posts to give a holistic picture of the overall feeling toward a brand as expressed via online channels. It's calculated on the total volume of mentions.

It is experienced as a shared national moment that drives conversation, emotions, and daily engagement throughout the tournament period. Egyptians largely view AFCON as a celebration of African football and regional unity, particularly across North Africa, rather than just a series of matches.

A moment of silence for everyone who watched Angola vs Egypt.....

مبروك تصدر المنتخب المصري مجموعته في البطولة الأفريقية، لكن وجب القول إن مباراة مصر وأنجولا، باستثناء مصطفى شوبير، كشفت بوضوح الفوارق الكبيرة بين لاعبي المنتخب الأساسيين والبدلاء، وهو أمر بدأ طبيعيًا في ظل سوء فترة الإعداد، وقلة العمل الجماعي، وضعف الانسجام بين عناصر لم تلعب معًا.
