

RAMADAN 2026 IN EGYPT

The series driving engagement in the first week on TV and streaming platforms

EARLY SIGNALS FROM RAMADAN 2026 IN EGYPT

This report is based on an integrated analysis of social intelligence insights and quantitative survey data conducted during the first week of Ramadan 2026. The study covers 20 Ramadan series (listed on page 9) and evaluates their performance across both TV and streaming platforms. The analysis tracks key indicators including awareness, anticipation, intent to watch or stream, and overall social reputation. Social reputation findings are derived from engagement levels and sentiment analysis across social media platforms. This report does not measure or reflect actual viewership or audience size. Results represent attitudes, perceptions, and social dynamics captured during Week One only and should be interpreted within this specific timeframe.

Ramadan 2026 is already shaping up to be a highly competitive season in Egypt, with clear series emerging. Our week one tracking highlights that momentum is not driven by one single factor. Instead, success of Ramadan series is defined by a combination of anticipation, viewing intent, conversation volume, and quality of engagement:

- Ali Klay emerges as the perception leader. It ranks first in awareness, anticipation, online conversation, and “expected biggest hit,” confirming strong pre-season marketing impact and digital visibility. However, the series ranks lower in planned viewing intent, indicating that perception leadership does not automatically convert into immediate viewing priority.
- In contrast, Ein Sehreya leads in planned viewing intent and online commenting activity, showing strong viewer commitment and active engagement. It also shows the strongest conversion from interest to action, a key indicator of sustained performance potential.
- Darsh and El Nos Al Thany demonstrate balanced performance across metrics, appearing consistently across awareness, anticipation, and conversation rankings. These titles benefit from both visibility and engagement, positioning them as stable contenders as the season progresses.
- El Set Monaliza and Fakhr Al Delta are strong in buzz and anticipation, but less dominant in declared viewing plans, suggesting attention-driven momentum that will need to convert into sustained audience behavior.

EARLY SIGNALS FROM RAMADAN 2026 IN EGYPT

Three dynamics defined week one of Ramadan:

1. Perception leadership (awareness and anticipation) is concentrated around a small number of Ramadan series.
2. Planned viewing remains more fragmented, with audiences distributing their attention across multiple series.
3. Conversation volume and active commenting do not fully overlap with anticipation rankings, highlighting different stages of audience engagement.

With high online activity levels and multiple titles competing for attention, Ramadan 2026 remains open and highly competitive in Egypt.

The key question will be which titles convert early perception into sustained viewing loyalty?
