Nobody's Unpredictable

Methodology

- These are the findings of an Ipsos Reid poll conducted between September 6-10, 2010 on behalf of Global Television. For this survey, a sample of 7,208 Canadians from Ipsos' Canadian online panel was interviewed online as follows:
- Metro Vancouver (n=428), Kelowna Area (n=402), Calgary (n=426), Edmonton (n=433), Regina (n=422), Saskatoon (n=425), Winnipeg (n=423), Toronto (n=437), Montreal (n=425), Halifax (n=423), Nova Scotia outside Halifax (n=426) – herein called Nova Scotia, New Brunswick (n=432), Rest of Canada (n=2,106)
- Weighting was then employed to balance demographics and ensure that the sample's overall composition reflects that of the adult population according to Census data and to provide results intended to approximate the sample universe.
- A survey with an unweighted probability sample of this size and a 100% response rate would have an estimated margin of error of:
 - +/-4.8 percentage points for each individual city/region, 19 times out of 20, of what the results would have been had the entire population of that particular city or region been polled;
 - +/-1.2 percentage points for the national Canadian population, 19 times out of 20, of what the results would have been had the entire population of adults living in Canada been polled.
- All sample surveys and polls may be subject to other sources of error, including, but not limited to coverage error, and measurement error.
- Note of change in methodology: last year's "national" figures were an aggregate of all of the cities/regions combined and was therefore best described as a sample of urban Canadians. This year's national numbers are a truer reflection of a national sample (including rural Canadians). Thus, tracking comparisons on a national level should be used with caution. For example, while concern for crime appears to be down on a national level, it is likely that crime is less of a concern for rural Canadians and this brings down the proportion of mentions of crime. Tracking at a city level is unaffected.
