CITY SPECIFIC QUESTIONS - TORONTO

QT2. As you know, Toronto Mayor Rob Ford was elected in November last year and he and the new council got down to governing the city in January, 2011. Since then, a great deal of focus has been to wipe out a budget deficit in 2012 of somewhere between $443 million and $774 million. Overall, based on what you've seen, read or heard, do you think the budget process is on the right track or headed in the wrong direction?

CITY SPECIFIC QUESTIONS - TORONTO

QT3. Some People say the budget deficit is rising in Toronto because not enough taxes are being collected to maintain the quality of life the city must offer its citizens - so taxes should be raised to close the gap, not deep cuts to employees, services and programs. Other People say the budget deficit is rising in Toronto because there are too many employees, too much waste and wrongheaded spending of taxpayer money at city hall - so taxes should not be raised to close the gap, instead there should be deep cuts to employees, services and programs. Which do you think Toronto should do?
