

1. In the last couple of months First Nations protestors have staged a hunger strike blockaded some rail lines and highways to demand meaningful negotiations with the Government of Canada on issues facing their community. Some people feel that these are really just isolated incidents caused by radicals in the Aboriginal community, and that they shouldn't be viewed as anything bigger than that. Other people feel these incidents are not isolated, but are a sign of growing discontent and anger among Canadian First Nations. Which of these two broad points of view comes closest to how you feel?
