6. As you may know at, at the request of the Senate of Canada, the external auditing firm Deloitte has audited a number of Senators expense reports, and has said there are problems with some claims relating to housing allowances and travel expenses. In one case, Senator Mike Duffy repaid $90,000 in expenses by way of a monetary gift he received from the now former Chief of Staff to the Prime Minister, Nigel Wright. Questions surrounding the appropriateness of the monetary gift have resulted in Senator Duffy resigning from the Conservative caucus and now sitting as an independent Senator and Nigel Wright having resigned as Chief of Staff to the Prime Minister. Which of the following do you think is the best way to get to the bottom of the situation:

7. Nigel Wright, former Chief of Staff to the Prime Minister, is a wealthy individual and says that the personal cheque for $90,000 was a personal monetary gift to Senator Mike Duffy to help him pay back expenses identified by the audit that he owed. The Prime Minister has also stated that he no knowledge of Mr. Wright's actions. Which is closer to your view?

8. Overall, would you say the involvement of the Prime Minister's Office in the Senate expenses issue represents a serious ethical breach by the Prime Minister and his government which throws into question their fitness to govern Canada, or, would you say this is a relatively minor issue that says little about the ethical fitness of the Prime Minister and his government to govern Canada?

11. A senator can claim an annual housing allowance of $22,000 as an expense if they have a primary residence outside of Ottawa where the Senate actually exists. It is expected that they would spend the majority of their time at the primary residence and then travel back and forth for Senate business. Three senators who were recently audited claimed a $22,000 living allowance because their primary residence was in another part of the country; however it was found that one senator only spent 30% of his time in his primary residence in Prince Edward Island, another only spent 21% of his time in his primary residence in Westmeath, Ontario, and the other only spent 10% of his time in his primary residence of Maniwaki. In short, all three claimed living allowances for a primary residence that they rarely ever visited. Some people say that it's possible that they made clerical mistakes and that they should be allowed to pay back the expenses that they shouldn't have claimed and stay as a Senator. Other people say that regardless of their own personal excuses, if there has been a violation of living allowance expenses, they should have known better and if found to be in breach should resign from the Senate. Which is closer to your point of view?
